“ A good man. I remember he took me to Bethel to check on a man doing some yard work for some benevolence money as he said it would be a good experience for me. And Virgil grandpa Warner telling me that besides Revelation, Deuteronomy said not to add to the word. And that I called and got to talk to Helen not realizing her health. Guess I was couple months late this time. Blessings.

“ I will miss you, Uncle Roscoe. I knew you only briefly relative to your full life, hearing more of you from my father than being with you in person. I am sorry I didn't get to know you more. It's strange how time marches on causes a family I barely knew to pass on. I remember when I met Roscoe for the first time, I was quite shocked how much he looked like me. The other day, my son and daughter were commenting after they saw a more recent picture of Roscoe and I together, that I look like Roscoe.

The first time we met, I was so young I barely can remember. Apparently all of your family made an effort to create a rocking horse for Bob, and a rocking swan for me. I still remember the image in the basement with all the commotion, and that rocking white swan.

Later, coming over to your home in Indiana, meeting all the other cousins, your children; and later still when at Roger's and Grandpa's funeral seeing even more of the entire Warner family. It's amazing to me, the sequence of events that have led to my not being close to all the Warner's, how much in character we all are alike even with the distance and separation. When you came for my Dad's passing on, you brightened up the day with the theme of my father's character alive in you. I know you will be missed by all, your children, your nieces, your nephews, and all the descendants of. Rest well, Uncle Roscoe, your kindness is in all of us.

“ I remember meeting Rosco and Sue when they joined New Hope. They quickly became some my best friends. When I retired Rosco made me the nicest bulletin board with all kinds of candy that told a story just precious. we went out to eat with friends sometimes and went to singings at the gospel barns and once i went to their home and he showed me how he had organized his tools.I loved that and he taught a class at New Hope I really enjoyed it. Will always remember a good man named Rosco.

“ I remember my uncle Roscoe turning off his hearing aid, the big box that was always in his front shirt pocket, to make an oasis of peace in a houseful of kids...his own and several of the cousins. Then keeping it on and pretending he couldn't hear us when he darn sure could. A big bear of a man with a gruff bark and no bite...but I didn't know that then, and I never wanted to test it. The care, gentle guidance and, at times, not so gentle correction of my dad and his brothers, at times indistinguishable (a booming voice is a booming voice, you didn't wait to see too whom it was attached) was the blueprint I used, whether I knew it or not, to becoming a man myself. We couldn't have had better role models for that process.

“ We didn't have the pleasure of knowing Mr. Warner, but we know his daughter, Rosa. And Rosa has more love for others in her than most. Mr. Warner must have been a blessing to all those around him, just as Rosa is. May his family and friends feel the loving presence of our Father at this time.
